The 55 organizations and individuals who are participating in this filing of the Campaign as well as those who participated in the earlier comments in this matter work to assure that new telecommunications technologies will be available to, usable by, and affordable for all citizens, regardless of where they live and regardless of what disability or other condition they may have that is a barrier to their using some kinds of equipment.

In addition to those who participated in the earlier filing, the Campaign is joined by the following individuals and organizations (reference to an organization for each participant marked with an asterisk is for identification purposes only):

Center for Independent Living for SW
Kansas
Troy Horton, Executive Director
Garden City, Kansas

Ann-Marie Hughey*
National Council on Independent Living
Arlington, Virginia

Central Iowa Center for Independent Living
Robert Jeppesen, Executive Director
Des Moines, Iowa

Mainstream
Rita Byers, Executive Director
Little Rock, Arkansas

Artie Davis,* President
Mid-America Congress on Aging
Topeka, Kansas

Spa Area IL Services, Inc. (SAILS)
Brenda Tweedle, Executive Director
Hot Springs, Arkansas

Milissa Gofourth*
Policy/Funding Specialist
Oklahoma ABLE Tech Project of the OSU Wellness Center
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

The Campaign has filed comments in other Commission proceedings and has participated in other telecommunications regulatory proceedings.

The Campaign's reply comments are these:

The Campaign's constituents rely on existing local telephone companies, like Southwestern Bell, to assure that they will have local telephone service. In the course of getting such service, the Campaign's have a major and immediate interest in being able to get access to broadband technologies like ADSL service.

One major reason that these constituents rely upon the existing telephone companies is that new competitors make it eminently they are not interested in low-end residential consumers who commonly are among the Campaign's constituents. New competitor are interested in business customers and sometimes high-end residential customers, but now small end customers.

No doubt, the new competitors take that position because it is more profitable. That suggests that the traditional local telephone companies will shape their business plans to follow the lead of the new competitors. Thus, new competitors will not serve residential customers. Old telephone companies will look for opportunities to act like new competitors, but outside their traditional, regulated territories. And, interest in low-end residential customers will decline. In that scenario, new telephone companies win; old telephone companies win; many residential customers allocated to the wrong side of the digital divide.

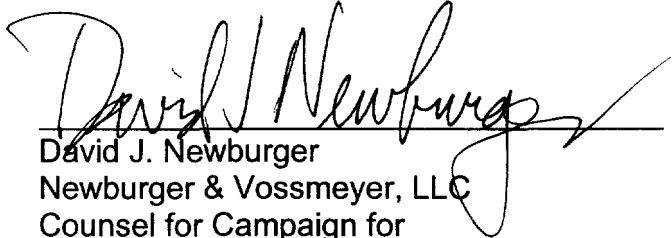

If the FCC facilitates allowing the old telephone companies into long distance competition in their services areas, their prospects for profitability in their service areas increases. That creates the opportunity for the old telephone companies to have a greater interest in their high- and low-end residential customers. And that, in turn, gives the Campaign's constituent the chance to universally located, universally designed telecommunications services – the fundamental bottomline goal of the Campaign.

I. Conclusion

For the reasons stated here, and in their original comments, the Campaign believes that allowing SBC into the business of providing long-distance service to customers in Kansas and Oklahoma and its other universal service areas will have at least two benefits in the public interest. SBC's entry into the business will enhance the possibility that SBC will focus on assuring that it provides the best present and future telecommunications services in its service areas, including putting downward pressure on long-distance service prices. Second, allowing SBC into the business will create a choice of a long-distance service provider that will simplify service and billing options for many customers and otherwise assure that all its services are fully accessible. Therefore, the Campaign suggests the Commission should approve SBC's application.
